Abstract. Amongst the sector in the society, the youth is believed to be the most vulnerable in terms of extremist influence. This is according to Theo Dolan, Technical Advisor of Civil Society and Peacebuilding (Dolan, 2018). This belief was seconded by Jessica Trisko Darden, a Kirkpatrick Fellow at the American Enterprise Institute, explicating that youths' vulnerability to terrorist recruitment can be affected by a multitude of factors. This includes geographic proximity to a terrorist group, economic vulnerability, perceptions of social or

INTRODUCTION (Background, Problem Statement, Framework, etc.)

In these modern times, the rapid change in our environment had entailed a great change to peoples' behavior and attitude. Globalization, for instance, created strands of opportunities where people, money, material goods and ideas traveled in silken strands, and have done so in greater numbers and with greater speed than ever in the present age (Globalization, n.d.). Much to these favors, however, some adverse effects became inevitable. For instance, its "open policy" feature resulted to an increased presence of various external forces and elements
